After Michael Clegg left, the board moved quickly to secure the services of Cunningham, who brought in assistant manager Nigel Keogh and player-coach Sean Newton with the aim of preparing a squad capable of challenging for promotion once again.

Having faced Ashton on the opening day of the season, Clegg (along with assistant Andy Heald) was brought in to replace Jody Banim in December 2019, but had to endure two seasons disrupted by Coronavirus before getting a full campaign under his belt – inconsistent league form was offset by a Manchester Premier Cup Final win at the end of the 2021-22 season, but league form remained moderate and Clegg resigned on January 2nd 2023 after two heavy defeats over the Christmas / New Year period.

Jody Banim took sole control of the club's playing affairs from the end of the 2016-17 season, appointing experienced defender Simon Woodford as his assistant. The combination worked incredibly successfully in their first season, as Banim led Ashton to runners-up spot in the Northern Premier League and promotion to National League North via the play-offs. It was no real surprise when the club struggled in the higher division and were relegated back after one season, but the board stood by their manager and funded him to rebuild the squad but, with the summer's investments failing to pay dividends, Banim was relieved of his duties after exiting all cups and with only four wins from 14 league games leaving the club on the fringes of the relegation zone.

The club's two most senior players at the time of Phillips' / Halford's departure were elevated to the position of caretaker-managers and, after the interview process was concluded, were asked to continue in their role - having led the club to a win and a draw (both away from home) in the interim period. After losing a significant number of players, mainly to Stalybridge Celtic, the joint-managers steadied the ship and ended the season strongly in a comfortable mid-table position before Haining decided to step away from football and retired from the game.

Paul Phillips had applied for the manager's job when Danny Johnson left and been appointed assistant manager under Craig Robinson, making him an obvious replacement as Robinson quickly departed. Phillips immediately turned to former Droylsden team-mate Halford, then player-manager at Mossley, to form the club's first ever permanent managerial double act. The club had to virtually rebuilt the squad over the summer - with many players choosing to follow Danny Johnson to Nantwich - however, after a slow start, Ashton made the play-offs in the pair's first season as managers and only lost the final on penalties; a then best ever third-place finish in the NPL the following season was an improvement on 2014 but again the play-off dream ended on penalties. A third successive play-off finish was achieved in 2016, with Ashton losing out to big spending Salford City - keeping the run going that each of the teams that beat Ashton in the play-offs ended up winning promotion. With Ashton unbeaten in the league at the start of September 2016, the managers accepted the Stalybridge Celtic job and finally got their move up a division.

Club captain Craig Robinson was a popular choice amongst the supporters to succeed Danny Johnson - competitive and forthright on the field, he was following in his father's footsteps as a non-league manager whilst brother Karl had gone one better and become the youngest manager in the Football League when taking over at MK Dons in 2010. Robinson quickly realised that he did not wish to fully commit to player / manager role at 30, with several years potential playing career ahead of him, and - typical of a man who had never tackled any challenge at Ashton half-heartedly - tendered his resignation rather than be prepared to try and muddle through. Some of the players Robinson had recruited in pre-season went on to help take Ashton into the play-offs in the season to come - and Robbo's own decision seemed justified when he scored Warrington Town's only goal in a 1-0 win over Exeter City in the 1st round FA Cup tie in 2014; not surprisingly a return to management did eventually come his way, taking over at City of Liverpool in 2018 – albeit whilst still playing.

Danny Johnson turned to coaching after his own promising career was cut short through injury; he developed a very useful side at Trafford before accepting the Ashton job and becoming the club's longest serving manager to date, plotting their then highest ever finish in the Northern Premier League and winning the NPL Challenge Cup along the way. As a manager Johnson engendered tremendous loyalty from the players he trusted, with several making over 100 club appearances under him - three of whom went on to pass 200 games in red and white.

Scott Green proved a steadying hand on the tiller after the club had had three managers in the year prior to his appointment - his undoubted ability on the pitch being a considerable factor in the club's attempt to regain stability. All that came to an end as Green resigned immediately prior to boarding the coach to an away match, claiming a press release from the club had undermined his position - a point that was strenuously denied by the board.

Paul Futcher was, at one time, England's most expensive defender and he enjoyed a long career as a player - which he managed to extend well into his forties through consummate professionalism; dropping into non-league, he led Gresley to the Championship of the Southern League in 1997 then took Southport to Wembley in the FA Trophy final of 1998 – by featuring in the game at the age of 41, he became the oldest outfield player to feature in a final under the twin towers. After retiring from playing Futcher returned to football as manager at Stalybridge Celtic (then of the Conference) but left with the side facing relegation, and three years later took over at Hurst Cross; despite his best efforts and a steady turn-around of personnel, Ashton made little progress and he and assistant Gerry Luczka resigned after eight months in charge. He died of cancer in November 2016, aged just sixty.

Scorer of over 500 career goals at non-league level, John Coleman was appointed into his first managerial role at Hurst Cross as successor to Phil Staley; he continued to ply his trade as a striker and set his teams up to score goals too – in doing so, Coleman achieved two third place finishes, two NPL 1st Division Cup wins and reached the quarter finals of the FA Trophy - a club best – with Ashton; in 1999 he was surprisingly released after closely missing promotion for a second season running, with the board believing he had taken the club as far as he could at that time. Coleman led Stanley to the promotion that had eluded him at Hurst Cross as a player-manager in his first season in charge, then all but retired from the playing side; he eventually took the club into the Football League, earning recognition as one of England's finest club managers plying his trade outside the top tiers of the game.

Staley made numerous signings in an attempt to bring improvements to his squad over the course of the 1995-96 season - but this came at the cost of continuity and duly affected progress on the field. A slow start to the 1996-97 season ensued and Staley was relieved of his duties after around one third of the campaign had elapsed. Staley published a book in 2002 about his life in non-league football called "Get those sheep off the pitch" (featuring a picture of sheep on the pitch of his first managerial assignment, Bethesda Athletic, on the cover) and didn't retire until 2012 when a health scare stopped him from taking his place in the Nantwich dug-out as Assistant Manager; three years out of the game proved enough for this great survivor, and he returned to scouting in 2015.

Albert Pike became Ashton third manager of the 1985-86 season as he took control of a team floundering in the lower reaches of the North West Counties League 2nd Division – with The Robins having started the season expecting to push for promotion. Pike built stable foundations in the coming months and managed a fourth-place finish in the table for the 1986-87 season, then won the 2nd Division title in 1988 with just four defeats and having scored over 100 goals along the way; he lost many of his better players to higher-ranked opponents over the summer and made a slow start to life back in the 1st Division as a result - however, given the previous year's success. It was a significant surprise when he was relieved of his duties after a 3-2 FA Vase win over Formby, with his record for the season in all competitions standing at what looked a fairly reasonable five wins, three draws and six defeats.

After Jim Fletcher was dismissed, Billy Ash was appointed caretaker-manager - but he did not take a game as, within a week, a former assistant manager to Billy Chell was appointed as the new man in charge. Having been the number 2 over the 1984-85 season, Clowes left Hurst Cross when Chell retired at the end of that campaign, returning as manager in his own right in October 1985. Clowes lasted just twelve games in charge (although the players were already picked for him in his final game as manager due to his late arrival at the ground), most of which were lost despite a bright start. Clowes later returned to Hurst Cross in a coaching capacity when Albert Pike was manager and then was at Hyde United in a similar role during their extremely successful period when Mike McKenzie, another former Ashton player, was manager.

When Billy Chell retired at the end of the 1984-85 season, his team had finished 4 th in the North West Counties League 2 nd Division – Fletcher, assisted by Billy Ash, was unable to build on that platform and, after just three league wins all season and losing every game played in September, the former Bacup manager was sacked following a 1-4 reverse at Colwyn Bay in mid-October.

Chell took on a team with only a handful of league wins to its name and would have saved the club from relegation but for a points deduction incurred before he took over; he almost secured a return to the North West Counties 1 st Division at the first attempt, finishing fourth in his one full season in charge before taking the decision to retire from football.

Partridge went on to become Chief Scout for Manchester City and worked on fundraising efforts with Manchester City Old Boys charity football team over many years (either side of his time at Ashton) - he was awarded the Medal of Distinction (an award rarely presented to civilians) by the Army, in recognition of having raised over £1M for various charities.

A moderate first season saw a high turnover of players and a 17th placed finish – the stability he brought the following season (26 players, roughly half of whom were retained from the previous campaign) saw the club rise to finish 4th. Hopkinson announced he was retiring toward the end of his final term, a decision probably exacerbated by him injuring his leg when falling through rotten timber at the dilapidated old ground that Hurst Cross was becoming. Ashton finished mid-table and Hopkinson bowed out with a cup final, albeit it in a losing cause; he played once during his tenure with the team bereft of players, many of whom had gone to the wrong ground – thus making him one of the club's oldest ever players.

Staley's first season in charge ended with a lower-mid-table finish – quite typical for The Robins' sides of that era - but with signs of progress at least; his second campaign, the 1977-78 season, was progressing reasonably well overall and good progress was being made in the FA Trophy (wins over Formby, Nantwich and then a 6-0 romp against Northern Premier League side South Liverpool) when Staley and the club fell out. An issue of dissent had been noted by the referee at Formby and the culprit (Staley) was asked to pay the subsequent fine – refusing to do so, the manager resigned rather than cough up and left the club just four days after the magnificent result against South Liverpool.

Despite this, the club were happy to let Sutton continue, and he was in the midst of preparing for the coming season when the club were rocked by his resignation on July 25th – less than a month before the start of the season; it was a double change for The Robins as popular club President Sid Sykes was replaced by seafood entrepreneur Roy Donnelly the same week. Sutton then went on to a second spell as Hyde manager, leading the club through some successful seasons, winning the Cheshire League title and promotion to the Northern Premier League in 1982; he was also a decent cricketer away from the commitments of the football season, playing for Denton St. Lawrence CC.

Atkins brought a degree of stability to the club during a long probationary period – he wasn't given the role permanently until he'd been in charge for four months, although results tailed off after his appointment was made permanent and this meant he was released from his post with one game of the season to play.

Despite this, the board were content to give Oxtoby the job on a permanent basis and allow him the summer to build his own squad, but few of the players brought in made a lasting impression at Hurst Cross and, having failed to win any of the opening dozen league matches, the former Bolton and Tranmere man tendered his resignation - the end arriving after Ashton were dumped out of the FA Trophy by students from Leeds Carnegie University. Webster was in charge for the first half of the 1973-74 season, a period that saw Ashton benefit massively from goals scored by a Webster signing - Graham Smith – but defensive problems meant that two goals were rarely enough to win a match. The week after being forced to name himself as a substitute (at the age of 42) Ashton played an experimental first fixture on a Sunday – the 1-4 reverse to Prestwich Heys at Hurst Cross proved to be Webster's last game in charge. After Ashton, Eric Webster went on to become a legend at Stockport County, holding virtually every role possible in a club of their size – youth coach, assistant manager, manager, scout and even groundsman - he rightly sits in County's Hall of Fame at Edgeley Park.

Milkman Dennis Schofield dedicated most of his life to football in one way or another – in 1964 he founded what is now known as Deans Youth & Ladies, a grassroots phenomenon in Salford, he has scouted for a number of top clubs in the region (including both United and City) and, in 1971, he took on the role of Ashton United manager recently vacated by Billy Wheeldon. Ashton had only two league wins to their name when Wheeldon departed on September 28th, 1971, before the ship was steadied for a couple of months by senior players Lawson and Colquhoun prior to Schofield's arrival at the end of November. A mid-table finish brokered hope for further improvement the following season but, although the foundations had been laid, the team did not make progress and ended the season just six points above bottom markers Radcliffe – gathering less points in a full season under Schofield than he had managed during just 34 games the previous campaign. After departing Hurst Cross, Schofield returned to his Salford routes and a decade after joining Ashton United he spotted yet another talented youth in Salford and persuaded a young man – then Ryan Wilson, now known as Giggs – to join his Deans side... Dennis Schofield was still coaching the Deans' youngsters when the Welshman was in his prime with Manchester United twenty years later.

John Colquhoun and Allan Lawson were two fine players in their own right; they had been brought to Hurst Cross by Jack Rowley, who had previously managed the pair at Oldham Athletic; during a caretaker period in charge, the two men oversaw ten games, the final match of which was abandoned after an hour due to a frozen pitch at Hurst Cross – the following week's fixture against Droylsden (Dennis Schofield's first in charge) was also abandoned due to failing light with no working floodlights at the ground.

Billy Wheeldon played for the famous Manchester amateur side Goslings either side of a short spell on the wing at Hurst Cross in the 1940s; he had spent eleven years coaching at Droylsden - and a spell at Stalybridge in a similar role - prior to being given control of team affairs at Ashton when Jack Rowley stepped aside. The Robins had endured a tough time since re-joining the Cheshire League and, whilst the mid-table finish Wheeldon achieved in 1971 was only a qualified success, it was achieved with a points tally greater than had been obtained over the two previous seasons combined. The 1971-72 season started sufficiently poorly (two league wins in the first ten outings) that it cost Wheeldon his job, but Ashton fans have cause to be grateful for that section of his career, as he introduced club legend Barney Daniels to Hurst Cross for his debut. In 1973, whilst coaching with Hyde, Wheeldon suffered a heart attack, but that didn't stop him making a return to football and working in a coaching capacity three further times at Hurst Cross, the last being during the 1987-88 North West Counties 2nd Division title-winning season.

The former Manchester United and England man denied in the press that he was after the manager's job at Ashton at the time his son was playing for the club, but Rowley was eventually inserted into the role after Bob Farriday resigned under the impression that the story in the papers did not reflect the club's – or possibly Rowley's – ambitions. Rowley stressed he did not want the job and only accepted after Cliff Pratt had been caretaker for a number of weeks - he agreed to assist the club for free but only took charge for the tail end of the 1969-70 campaign and a few games into the following season until a Blackpool skipper Hugh Kelly broke his ankle against Liverpool in the penultimate league game of the 1953-54 season, meaning he missed what came to be known as 'The Matthews' Final' a couple of weeks later. Having played for Blackpool throughout a professional career stretching to seventeen seasons and some 500 appearances (one Scotland cap), Kelly came to Hurst Cross in the summer of 1961 – Ashton had just been demoted to the second tier of the Lancashire Combination despite a mid-table finish (they resigned to contest membership of the Cheshire League and, after failing to get elected, found their 1st Division place had been re-allocated) Kelly's team was packed with professionals and swept the competition aside in winning the 2nd Division title – registering a 100% home record and picking up the League Challenge Cup for good measure. The following season saw the team finish third, albeit ten points behind champions Morecambe, but the club were not as well set financially – they'd invested heavily in new floodlights, been fined £100 for making inappropriate payments to amateurs and then suffered storm damage to the main stand; Kelly resigned, stating a lack of funds, in August 1963 and although was to go on the backroom staff at Bloomfield Road, he soon left football to concentrate on running an ice cream business, café and shop in the town.

Alan Ball senior spent most of his career as a lower league professional, unlike his more-illustrious footballer son of the same name – but he did enjoy a reasonable amount of success as a manager, most notably at Halifax, where he led them to promotion in his first spell at the Shay, and at Preston, leading them to the 3rd Division title in 1971.

After leaving Oswestry, the town where he kept the King's Head pub whilst player /player manager, Ball's first non-playing management role had been at Borough United, a team from Llandudno, who he led to the Welsh League (North) title in 1959 before switching to Hurst Cross and appointing former Ashton and Manchester United goalkeeper Bill Fielding as coach / reserve team manager – during his tenure, he gave a debut to Alan Ball junior, a future World Cup winner, whilst still a schoolboy. Ball senior is famously quoted as having managed both Oswestry and Nantwich simultaneously – with Nantwich getting his services on Mondays and Tuesdays, whilst Oswestry had him from Wednesday through to Friday ... he did not reveal how match days were spent, but the arrangement seems to have hastened his exit from Nantwich once it was discovered.
